Published Date: 08-07-2007 10:54 PM CT

He's been to the top of the world and to the bottom of the world, and tonight he's speaking out on his concern for the world. Arctic explorer Will Steger who's known for his travels in the North Pole, made a stop in New Ulm this evening to give a first hand account of what global warming is doing to the earth. I've been an eyewitness to a lot of these areas. I've traveled in areas thousands of miles as where most people have never been to and these are the areas that are changing first so I brought back an eyewitness account of sort of a global scale and then we bring it down to a more regional area of Minnesota. He says Minnesota is ahead of other states in its efforts to cut back on carbon emissions, but that more needs to be done on the federal level. His tour will continue for several months. His next stop is tomorrow in Nashville, Tennessee.
